The Military and Domestic Politics: A Concordance Theory of Civil-Military Relations (Cass Military Studies)

by Rebecca L Schiff

Product Description

One of the key questions in Civil-Military Relations (CMR) theory is: under what conditions will the military intervene in the domestic politics of the nation? Most scholars agree with the theory of objective civilian control of the military, which focuses on the separation of civil and military institutions, focusing on the US case. By contrast, concordance theory offers both an institutional and cultural framework for explaining domestic military intervention, emphasizing agreement among three partners: the political elites, the military and the citizenry.

Rebecca Schiff examines four indicators of concordance:

- Social composition of the officer corps
- Recruitment method
- Political decision-making process
- Military style.

If agreement occurs among the three partners with respect to the four indicators, domestic military intervention is less likely to occur. Here this theory is applied to six international historical cases studies: US, post-Second World War period; American Post-Revolutionary Period (1790-1800); Israel (1980-90); Argentina (1945-55); India post-Independence and 1980s; Pakistan (1958-69). Concordance theory offers a better explanation for predicting domestic military intervention than traditional theories and will be a valuable addition to the CMR literature.

The Military and Domestic Politics will be of much interest to advanced students of civil-military relations, military sociology, political science and US politics

Journal of Information and Communication Technology JICT

This vast world has shrunk into a small village. The Global Village! All barriers have been broken down. Worldwide accessibility has become as simple as talking to your neighbor. Doing business across the world is as simple as logging on your computer. The Internet Technology is not just for games, chatting and occasional research anymore, now it is an essential part of everyday life of every one. A business cannot flourish without becoming a global enterprise and becoming active part of the Global Village. Information and Communication Technology is the vehicle providing the access to the Global Village.

The technology is changing very rapidly because of the advanced features of ICT, AI, Telecommunication, e-commerce, IS, Robotics, Cyber Security, Data Mining, Network Storage Technologies, Software and Hardware Technologies. Now a days the technology becomes obsolete in 12 to 18 months, thus it is imperative for us to keep ourselves updated on the latest developments in ICT or become obsolete and be left out into oblivion. Today the user and the student of ICT must be willing to learn constantly to keep abreast with the technology growth.

JICT is an international Journal of Information and Communication Technology, published by BIZTEK on bi-annual basis. We welcome the submission of articles from researchers, academicians and practitioners in the area of ICT. For instruction to submission of manuscripts, please see the title flap.
